I think the bodies are way too thick. I like em to have a body with virtually no thread build up at all. Midges are tiny creatures.

Your technique, overall, looks good.

I tie in the wire at the rear of the hook, wind maybe 2 passes at most up behind the bead. Then I rib the fly, and tie down behind the bead. At that point, I build thread up to match the size of the bead and finish. That keeps the bodies nice and thin.
