

Subject: : Gear Talk

Topic: : Rod building

Rod building

Author: : jayL

Date: : 2007/1/2 14:00:16

URL:

Ok,

I saw one of the other threads had a good bit of info on rod building. I didn't want to hijack, so I'll make a new one.

I'm in college and fairly poor (those of you who have been here long can remember a similar thread in which I ask the same questions about fly tying. I'm happy to report that its one of my favorite hobbies now.)

Basically, I was wondering how much money I could save by building rods. I initially started tying flies out of thrift (although I don't think I saved much yet... but I will eventually) and it has become a very rewarding hobby. Is it something that I would want to try for these reasons? I'd hope that I enjoy it and can make a hobby/build rods for friends at wholesale, but if not, will it at least be cheaper than buying a new one?

I'm not great with my hands but I tend to get deeply immersed in things which I put my mind to (i'm a computer programmer).

If its worth a shot, and if I can afford it, let me know where to start. Tips/lessons learned would be great.

Thanks.

jay