My experience is the opposite. Have hooked two, landed one, neither intentionally...was fishing for Largemouth with Buggers. Both times they made an immediate run in the 180 degree opposite direction away from me. The one that broke me off did so as I applied too much pressure against this run. The one I landed took about 5 minutes probably and included several runs across the pond after I had gained a good bit of line. Don't know if you're the rule and I'm the exception or vice versa, but that's my experience with them.
