Some warmwater species like carp and catfish are funny. You can catch one that fights like a piece of driftwood, and another will run into the next county. I've even caught healthy smallmouth in the 15-18" range that didn't put up much of a fight after a minute, and then caught 12" smallmouth that fought every second until released. It could be the particular fish, or the water temp that day, etc. The few carp I've caught were decent fighters, and my wife caught an 18 incher that fought like it was wired! There's a lake near me with some really HUGE carp, but I don't target them: too many really huge bass! 🏆
