

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : The Unwritten Code of Erie Steelhead Etiquette

Re: The Unwritten Code of Erie Steelhead Etiquette

Author: : fishingood

Date: : 2011/11/4 17:58:33

URL:

btw, on a serious note, for anyone who's interested, I started out at Elk this morning, and caught a nice 25 inch brown, snapped a steelhead off, and also saw a loner steelhead, that would've been a personal best for me. After throwing three different flies at him, I finally got him to bite on a chartreuse sucker spawn. He ran a bit, and jumped once, before throwing the hook.. Not that I would be able to get him in with 5x tippet on.

Went back, checked out of the hotel, and moved to the east side, At 16 mile, I was happy to find about 20 fish in my favorite spot here, the pool just up from the bridge. Caught several steelies, and missed a bunch on black wooly buggers. Moved to 20 mile, where most of the fish were near the mouth of the lake, with some giants there. However, I saw two hookups in about two hours, neither of which were mine. Will post some pics soon.
Tight lines