Where do the brandywine smallies go?

Once late fall sets in and water temps fall below 50 degrees the smallies are almost impossible to find. This is my second season trying to locate them in winter. I've floated the brandywine over 40the trips and feel like I know every square foot between lenape and rockland. There are 6-8 text book wintering locations over those 10 miles. They're all crowded with carp and suckers no smallies can be seen. I conclude they are either excellent hiding in winter or they travel many miles to a location I'm not aware. I guess they could be there but I can't see them and can't get them to bite any artificial presentations. I'd love the read what others on this board think. Appreciate any help.

Once you fought a current cut smallie a strange thing happens and you don't care to target any other fish. Pound for pound the best fighting fish in fresh water. It s an addition.
