A buddy of mine and I once actually caught a few on crowe beetles of all things. On a dead drift too. But the conditions were just right. It was a warm october day, with low clear water temps in the 50's. And it was during the last hour of daylight - when the fish got real frisky and were porpoising quite a bit. So, yes it can be done at certain times I guess.

What flies do they recommend in the article?
