I have taken muskie on the fly during the warmer months but i would like to try the allegheny river this winter. I'll be honest i don't know anything about muskie winter behavior. I have done tons of research but there seems to be alot of contradiction out there. So i was hoping to find someone out there that knows something about winter muskie fly fishing. My biggest concern is locating them. Do they go deep and become dormant? I have read that mouths of smaller tributaries are good. Any advice would be much appreciated. Thanks.
