I got a cheapo pair for like $12. They work okay, but I would never take them brookies fishing in the middle of the wood because it would seem like night.

They do their duty on bright days when all I'm looking for is a movement of my leader/indicator. Plus I know I won't go blind because of the bright sun.

I have trouble paying over $50 for sunglasses for fishing, especially when my $12 pair works just fine. However, when I was a life guard, I bought a $135 pair of okley's, but 11 hour days staring at the pool, it was well worth it. Besides, what else was a 16 year old going to spend his money on?????

My usual advise to high priced items is: if you got the extra cash and want to splurge on yourself, then do it. We all deserve to get ourselves some nice things every once in a while.

If you don't have the cash, cut out something a little marginal in your life; like stop getting an apple pie and sunday from McD's after your large size extra value meal. Saving a little at a time, the money will add up.
