What a cool screen name, three thumbs up for that.”

Tim,

His Uncle named him that....and for good reason.

Like Tim, I too gave up my “Flying Fisherman” glasses (they did work well) and now need prescription lenses. And I too have struggled with the lenses being too dark or not dark enough in different lighting situations.

I found that the solution for me was photochromic lenses, which automatically adjust to different light conditions. One brand name that you see advertised is “transition” lenses. Action Optics makes them in prescription and non prescription models. They cost a little more, but they work great from dawn to high noon to dusk, and its cheaper than purchasing multiple pairs for bright light and low light conditions.
