For me, the chance of losing or destroying my sunglasses is directly proportional to the amount I spend on them. The cheaper they are, the longer I seem to hold on to them. Definitely get a polarized lense.

Non-polarized sunglasses for looking at water is like a wooly bugger with the hook-point broken off. I do think the lenses stay clearer and resist vest-pocket abrasions better on the expensive lenses, but if you sit on a nice set of clear lenses, they are just as broken as a slightly scratched or cloudy one.
