Cool post Sal. You can tell you were really on your game by that third trip and your brain was putting all of the pieces of the puzzle together that you learned from the first two. Great read. I don't fish spring creeks too often, but the same general ideas here can be applied to freestoners too...sometimes it's not necessarily the cast, drift, or fly that catches the fish, but the thought that went into it all. As you become familiar with a stream your brain starts to see all kinds of new angles and ideas on how to approach a situation...one of my favorite parts of fly fishing. Very much looking forward to the next installment.
