Sas, the great thing about fishing is you don't HAVE to be able to read the water like Sal did. However, as more years pass and new info is collected (as in Sal's essays), you will begin to apply that knowledge without even thinking. It happens slowly at first, but soon you will be able to read the water as well, if not better, than Sal 😊

Though it must be said that while I've been at this sport for 20+ years, I am still not even close to Sal's (or many others here) level. Many times I will study the water to find the best approach, then throw it all to the wind and try to catch the nearest fish 😊 Other times I'll contemplate the possible lies where fish may be hiding, walk around to the other bank, contemplate some more, retie my leader, select the perfect (assumed, of course) fly, and on the first cast spook the whole pool 😞
