Not sure about the dam. It depends (of course). Plunge pools below dams are known hot spots and are definitely worth looking into if you're after walleyes. Muskies are tougher. If it's a deep hole above a long length of relatively shallow water, I'd definitely check it out. If there's deeper, slower water downstream, maybe it won't be so hot. Pools below dams often have a lot of current and swirling water which will attract muskies under some conditions but for winter fishing I prefer slow and deep. The best spot, IMO, this time of year would be a deep, slow pool at the mouth of a feeder creek with logs and woody debris.
