WOW! I've seen a snake eat a brookie but never the other way around. I have noticed (via trout regurgitating while being handled) that during years with 'wet' summers brookies in two streams I frequent eat LARGE salamanders. Experimenting I tied on a 6" rubber salamander my son uses for bass and...BANG first drift a big brookie nailed it. Used a wooley worm after that with the same result in several pools. Didn't work under different conditions but when I switched to a muddler, that did...as usual.

I wonder if the snake was alive or dead when eaten.
