The cost of the glasses is higher, I think more like $50-100, and Maurice wasn't too tired to pay attention, but more likely too drunk.

The real problem is vision care insurance won't cover polarization unless you can get your optician to say they are medically necessary. I have to confess that as a result of this issue and my basic cheapness, I have had to opt for seeing my fly on the water rather than seeing fish in the water. I have clip-ons that are polarized, but the double lens effect causes a relection distraction and unless the sun is hurting my eyes, I leave them off. I would urge you to either spring for a pair of prescription polarized lenses or stick to the contacts and sunglasses.
