DaveS I think you may be right. I posted this back when we were experimenting with the forum last spring and not sure how much homework I had done with this. Based on the size I mention and time it would make sense it is the larger Ephemerella genus. I double checked and I did take the picture at 7:45 am on June 6, 2011.

This is the purpose of the forum to share known insects, but also help with some bugs that aren't as easily identified. I am not an entomologist and thankful the help in figuring some of these out. BWO and Sulphur I am sure will be a great source for fun and conjecture.

Any other thoughts?
