Agree that they must taste like MSG to the fish. Whenever they are present, I think it's a decent idea to prospect with a MB dun. Most of my nicer dry fly fish have come that way.

Now I just gotta figure out what I'm going to match with all these eastern MB (as well as GD, hendrickson, and a few others) patterns out here. I suspect they will go in the cuttie box until I find a more proper use for them.

No worries, no need to match hatches out there since the fish will hit just about anything that floats or drifts in front of them. Meh...not much of a sport. Real FFers fish PA.
