There are enormous Hex hatches throughout the Allegheny and Ohio drainages, including in downtown Pittsburgh. Bugguide is calling them bilineata species, I don't know if that would be consistent throughout the drainages or not. Definitely hex's, not so sure on species.

While the blizzard hatches are on the big rivers, some smaller tribs in the upper Allegheny definitely get the same bugs (including wild trout streams), and I can verify that I have had very good fishing over them.
