I think there are bigger fish out there. Why else go then. I dont think that the 50 and 60 were the glory days of musky huntin in pa. There is alot more catch and release being practiced and better management for the PAFBC. A musky approaching 50 inches is 15 to 20 yrs old but the lenght is not the difficult part, the girth is. In my noprof. opinion only a musky from a big body of water will obtain this. Like the allegheny or the "big" musky lakes in the north east. And the chances of hookin let alone landing a true beast on fly gear is damn near impossible. Well I know a couple of guys that could pull it off.

But I think that a big musky will tend to hold in deeper in water. Reaching this with a fly cast and depth that is properly fishable is the hard part. Fishing deep with a fly is the real problem.
