

Subject: : Tips and Tricks

Topic: : Early Season BWO's

Re: Early Season BWO's

Author: : afishinado

Date: : 2012/2/7 12:41:21

URL:

Quote:

MKern wrote:

I like the dry dropper for early BWO's.

I use a parachute dry and a beatis nymph pattern (green/brown dubbing and olive partridge tails and legs). To symbolish emergence I tie with dark wingcases.

If I'm on a stream where the fish will hit whatever, I just sub the more specific nymph for a PT.

as far as depth and distance between, it really depends on the water conditions. however, If using one of those ready to emerge nymphs (with the darker wingcases) maybe a foot between.

+1...pretty much

Parachute dry in the size and color to match the hatch and a nymph tied using an olive PT for the tail and body with partridge legs and a black or dark wing case - sometimes using pearl flashabou to make a flashback.