It will, stick around here. You will learn a ton. Very knowledgeable people.

+1. Once you know the basics (how to cast, tie knots, rebuild leaders, etc), reading this forum will reveal all kinds of tips that you'll pick up without realizing it until you're on the stream. As an example, the posts titled "how would you approach this section of water" (or something similar) usually get lots of responses from members of all levels of skill. While it may seem confusing reading the responses, when on the water it starts to fall into place. If you false cast and spook fish, you might recall reading about making false casts away from your intended target. Lesson learned.
