csoult,

Not really, if your dropper is two short you might, but if you mend the lead fly, the dropper will follow and it should be fine. Sometimes the extra slack between the lead fly and the dropper gives the dropper that much extra drift. Mending is key not matter if you are fishing 1 dry or 2.

It certainly doesn't work ALL the time, but it also has very useful applications, especially with emergers and like i said the ever frustrating multihatch (typically sulphurs and olives or that sort of thing)
