Who reads GRAY'S SPORTING JOURNAL MAGAZINE?

Have you find it of the value?

I've subscribed to GSJ for years (I've also spent more time than I should have trying to get an article published in it -just too hard, finally gave up). In any event, my interest in GSJ mainly flows from its association with the sporting art scene and I've been lucky to have had some art featured (and sold) in the magazine in the past. It deals with all types of hunting and fishing although the material leans heavily toward fly fishing and upland bird hunting. The magazine has always prided itself on high quality articles with strong literary aspects and excellent photography. It does seem to me that in recent years the magazine has steadily leaned toward more photographic content at the expense of good writing. Flip through a few pages of GSJ and it's immediately obvious that it's geared to the upper crust types - the bread and butter advertisements are for double guns costing far more than I could ever afford. Nevertheless, I still like GSJ. It's a bit on the pricy side so I'd recommend you buy a couple issues off the rack before shelling out for a subscription.
