Sounds good. I may have to try those. There is a little white midge that hatches on Penn's in June that I think is a 30 or 32. Have to tie something up for that this year.

I didn't go by a pattern for mine. I looked at the natural (dried up as he may have been) and said okay, what can I make look like him. I tied some with and some without the shuck. I have to tell you. I only once designed my own fly and that was a streamer but it is ultra cool to catch something on your own design. Hopefully I'll get that feeling again tomrrow.
