

Subject: : Hatch and Entomology Forum

Topic: : ?Black Quill?

Re: ?Black Quill?

Author: : flyers18

Date: : 2012/3/12 17:00:53

URL:

Don't wanna be stepping on anyones toes here but Leptophlebia cupida which is the latin name for the black quill normally hatches in early may. So I wouldn't be positive its a black quill sandfly. I would actually like to see more of a close up of the pic. Not sure what it is but the wings and body seem a little dark from pics I have seen of black quills. The black quills usually start when the grannoms are just finishing up on penns. Penns is the only stream where I have run into black quills and the duns are more chocolate brown then actually black.