Good deal. Looking forward to reading it.

For those of you in Allegheny Co. the library is great place for fly fishing books. The library system is cool because it connects the local library's with some bigger one like the Carnegie. They will even send a book say in Monroeville to the South Side library for you to pick up.

Do a search and see for yourself. Paul

Public libraries all over are a great resource for obscure flyfishing books. They have an inter-library system, so they can find some rather obscure books. I live in central PA, and my local library got me a book about fishing for brookies in West Virginia "back in the day" and similar book about old brookie days in the Adirondacks.

Both these books came from out of state libraries. No charge!

Of course this is true not only on flyfishing topics, but just about any subject that interests you.

BTW, don't expect Limestone Legends to be a techniques books on how to catch more fish. There's plenty of that around. This is more about the history of the streams and fishing in the Cumberland Valley.
