I don't know that they've ever presented a stream that wasn't in most guide books out there, though, so I'm not really sure I'm on board with the spot- burning outrage.

+1...Take this latest issue for instance...Conewago Creek, the one in Adams County, was featured. It's a decent stockie stream I guess, and a good WW fishery downstream, but it's not the type of stream most guys would complain about being "outed" IMO.

I enjoy it for what it is...good pictures, some decent gear stuff, and I like reading the stream breakdowns - most (or all?) of which I'll probably never fish. A lot of the stream breakdowns seem to be little more than advertisements for the local guides they feature in the article, but they're fun to read anyway. It has a place with my FF/Cabelas/BPS catalogs and Consumer Reports in my...office.
