

Subject: : Hatch and Entomology Forum

Topic: : BWO (?)

Re: BWO (?)

Author: : pcray1231

Date: : 2012/4/9 8:16:32

URL:

2nd one not a Baetis, going to disagree with old lefty here. Blow up that pic and that is not a tiny hind wing, it's a large one. I count only 2 tails, so not Drunella either. So not a BWO.

They are also not hendricksons because they only have 2 tails, as several have said.

Amaletus fits, as Sandfly indicated. My guess is Quill Gordon, though. Epeorus pleuralis. For BOTH, just a spinner and a dun, both same species. Fits fits for size, color, wings, tails, and timing!

If so, these transform to duns on the bottom, NOT in the surface film. Thus making them a good wet fly hatch.