I love the tricos because you can hit the same spinner fall more than once in the same morning.

They pretty much fall when the sun gets full on the water. But that doesn't happen evenly. So focus on the sunny areas first, fish the spinner fall, then hussle off to a more shaded area, where they won't have fallen yet.

Even better when there's morning fog over the stream. They'll fall when the sun burns through. So the disintegrating fog is like a marker. No fog here, they fell here already. But over here, fog still there, they haven't fallen here yet.
