Yes it does 😊

I tried again this evening, and got nothing fish wise.

But I did however, run into two other fly fishers out on the creek.

They told me that the stretch I was fishing was the most difficult area to fish due to the amount of wild brownies and the stillness of the water in that area. (i would say native, but even as a newbie, I saw the debates about that and didn't want to fuel the frenzie)

One gentleman was telling me about and how to use strike indicators with the nymphs and gave me one of the flies that was working well for him and a couple foam strike indicators.

The second gentleman was telling me about what was working for him and gave me a few prince flies and one he called a parachute fly.

The lack of caught fish was more than made up for in information education and new flies 😊
