Awesome, catching that first fish usually starts it all. The first year I fly fished I think I caught five and I fished a lot, so they were sweet little nuggets to keep me interested, not that I needed any more passion for it. I was addicted to it and have been ever since!

The strike indicators help you see the strike but pay attention to how drag works with them. You will get less drag with them but my buddy learned a lot about how when he would cast across a stream to fish the far bank and he saw how the middle of the stream was moving much faster than the sides and so on. He learned to make adjustments to how to make a cast into a hole or to make a drift by using strike indicators.

Good luck and may you get more tug love.
