

Subject: : Hatch and Entomology Forum

Topic: : Grey Fox - Maccaffertium Vicarium

Re: Cahill

Author: : pcray1231

Date: : 2012/4/30 18:23:02

URL:

Could be. There were tons of MB's, this was during the heart of their hatch, pics of one of them on another thread. Then this guy, very noticeably smaller and lighter in color and stood out like a sore thumb amongst the other sailboats coming downstream. I grabbed him thinking he was an invaria, he looked so light colored in comparison. But then realized he wasn't what I thought he was, so I snapped a pic for later identification with the help of the board.

GF variety of MB makes sense, more so than Cahill. But all of the above are in the same genus, Maccaffertium. So I mistook essentially a subspecies for a separate species in the same genus.

Moderators feel free to change the title to Gray Fox, I'm more comfortable with that on review.