What really surprised me was how a small change in technique makes a big difference! I was letting my fly line lie on the surface during a nymph drift and it must have been causing drag on the nymph.

At least 5 fishing expeditions, two "seminars" and probably 15-20 hrs of fishing produced 2 sunnies(prob by accident) and not a single definite hit on my indicator.

After you guys taught me the right way to hold the line, I was immediately getting hits and catching fish from my first cast. I really enjoy the "finesse" of FF, and am definitely enjoying the deprogramming from ~ 35+ years of spinfishing.

BTW Volks, forgot to thank you for showing me the big palomino you had been stalking and letting me take a shot at it!
