St. Paul once observed that there is a "war in my members." ["I do that which I wish not to do and do not do what I wish to do."]

Greed is an overpowering influence, as was observed likewise by the Buddha.

I don't want to be alarmist, but I think that we will always struggle with the desire for worldly benefit and the desire to preserve the environment and the outcome will be determined by which side of the issue is "heard" in our government. We know that greed rules in many instances, but there are a lot of good people that remain silent and therefore are NOT heard, even though they should be. Please do not be one of them. Remember, we are the vast majority, but we are under-funded. Word of mouth, however is a valuable tool and even is capable of equalizing power between those who would put aside clean streams, etc. for a short-term profit.
