You guys were absolutely right. They are hex's. I went back yesterday evening and found some of the bigger females. I firmly assumed that these bugs only have one concentrated hatch towards the end of summer. I can't recall ever seeing them this early in the year.

A mild storm rolled through right at sundown and like clockwork, there were hundreds of them riding the surface of the river and swarming the floodlights. I tried fishing them but the fish didn't seem too interested.

Thanks Chaz and Wildtrout for the responses.
