I still prefer DT lines - although it's getting a little hard to find them lately. For what a good line costs now, it definitely makes it worthwhile to be able to turn it around and get twice the use out of it IMO.

I've never had any problems with the welded loops, and just leave them on a line if it has it.

That said, I bought a WF ridge line 3 years ago. It was on sale for half price, so I decided to try it.

And I gotta say , it does cast really nice. It also seems to be very durable. After almost 3 years of hard fishing, it doesn't have a single crack in it.

Can't remember getting more than that amount of fishing - before turning it around - out of any other line I've had
