GPS is worldwide. You can get it in Siberia or Antarctica as easily as in a city. Perhaps easier.

In the Pine Creek Valley, I can verify that both my handheld and my car GPS do indeed work just fine.

Canyons will degrade signals, though. As can skyscrapers in cities. It might take a better antenna or something, or you may have a lower accuracy fix. Ultimately, I never cared whether it was accurate to 3 ft or 10 ft.

I have noticed that with my oldest handheld, it would go out even in the forest, the freakin foilage blocked the signal, which rendered it about useless in PA IMO. With my semi-newer one, with the better antenna, that's not a problem.
