Maurice,

It happens when I have slack line in the water, and on the shooting cast the excess gets flung over the butt. It is a quick fix though.

Any tips on preventing it?

Try holding your line hand further forward than your rod hand on the shoot. Pushing your rod hand forward farther than where the line come from (hopefully your line hand) causes you to run into the line and it tangles.

If you leave the line in the water and are facing upstream, the line flows behind you and this cannot be prevented. The line is ALWAYS behind the rod hand on the shoot.

Also, don't throw your arm forward on the shoot. It doesn't help the load any and it only makes your arm tired.

Happens to me too.
