I'm not sure the fly pattern itself makes a lot of difference, although I've seen certain colors work better than other at times for bass.

Think presentation rather than pattern.

I usually start with aggressive type fishing (when water temps are in the ideal range). I like to fish poppers and sliders on top - great fun seeing them come up.

If I strike out, I'll try swinging and stripping streamers/clousers/ buggers underneath.

No fish? I'll dead drift a bugger, let it swing, hang, and strip back - all on the same cast, to see what type of presentation the fish want. Still no fish?...

I'll dead-drift buggers and/or larger nymphs deep, since the fish are not chasing.
