Why ban it? Easy, they don't want it in their backyard unless they get something out of it and they had the power and ability to do it. Politics is all about power and money and money controls power and power controls money. The fact that there may not be sufficient gas reserves for a company to invest money in is totally irrelevant, they want to make sure it isn't ever going to happen and/or make it extremely painful for the gas company to get permits (read extremely painful as, "extort additional concessions.")

Politicians are not idiots, they are scumbags and crooks finding a way to line their pockets at the expense of the taxpayers while creating the illusion that what they are doing is in the best interest of their constituents when it really is self-serving. And they get reelected. Nothing a politician does is truly in the best interest of their constituents – everything has an angle – some are just more obvious than others.

And next year these politicians will return the favor to those other politicians who voted for it or kept their mouth shut and allowed it to pass.

It's how it works.
