I witnessed what I believe was a Hex spinnerfall last evening about 1/2 hour before dark on the Conestoga River near Lancaster. It only lasted for about 10-15 minutes and was not real heavy but the flies were huge bobbing up and down and generally working upstream. Unfortunately I wasn't able to catch any as most of them seemed to be over a deeper section of water. I didn't see any topwater action involving this short lived hatch but it was really cool to watch. Anybody else ever see a Hex hatch on the Stoga? This was my first and I am just looking for some confirmation that it may have been Hex mayflies.
