Looks to me like some guys have a film relating to fly fishing. They've showed it, or at least parts of it, at some film festivals. They now have it finished, and want to release it to a larger audience, but need money to do so.

Kickstarter is a conditional "pre-buy" program. You give them a credit card number. Kickstarter keeps track of how much they've sold. Once they hit what they need, your card gets charged, DVD's get made, and you get one. If they don't hit their goal, the credit cards aren't charged.

They're asking us to buy the film on Kickstarter. No danger of paying for nothing. Buy, and either a DVD will come in the mail, or else your money will be refunded.
