Stag, just to give you an idea, and everyone is different, I have a 6 1/2 rod specifically for Brookie fishing. We have some really good brookie guys on PAFF and I'm not one of them yet. So just use my words as guidance not gospel.

I have a 9 .. I'm assuming from ur post if I fish a brookie stream with it I'm going to have all types of problems, even more than usual. Sure I can get into a rod at a decent price if I choose to but do you need a new (different) reel and line as well?
