I don't use green weenies very often but so many people rave about them that I should.

My tip for nymphing is to watch either you line tip or indicator to monitor whether your nymph is going slower than the surface of the water.

The surface speed is faster than the speed of the current on the bottom so if your line tip or indicator is going at the speed of the surface, your nymph needs more weight to get it down so it can be ticking or rolling along the bottom.

Basically, you just want to see the foam, leaves, etc. floating past your indicator as your fly comes back to you.
