

Subject: : Tips and Tricks

Topic: : Approaching a Spring Creek Vol. 4 - The Letort is a Girl

Re: Approaching a Spring Creek Vol. 4 - The Letort is a Girl

Author: : joseywales

Date: : 2012/8/2 11:56:01

URL:

Excellent post. I have hunted for years, including archery, and found the art of being stealthy useful in so many ways. Sneaking out of my toddlers room years ago, so as not have one wake and be crying for two more hours! You think about every step and every move before you make it. Using airplanes to cover your noise, etc.

Movement is typically the deal breaker and in FFing you just can't avoid it. This was a great tutorial on how to manage your movement and maximize your chances by taking control.

I went to a limestone creek, new to me, yesterday. No rod. Just walking it and looking around. I regretted not being better suited for a hike though, as a longer walk up and downstream would have been more beneficial. I did have a notepad and pen with me and documenting things in the future will be an asset for sure. I did notice how small browns, tucked "under" the bank, would just shoot out, as I walked slowly and quietly along the edge. More skiddish than a mature buck or a groundhog that's for sure. Should be interesting....

Thanks again!