Its the amount of people or traffic on the stream is what I'm talking about. You can't fish effectively on a small brookie stream with 3 guys on your shoulder. Ya just can't be stealthy enuff.

B.S. It gets harder to keep things organized, but if the people are organized, you can do it successfully nomatter how many people you have. Stealth isn't any more of a problem with more people. Stealth is only required as you approach a hole, and nomatter how many you have, only 1 person is approaching a hole.

The problem is simple. Amount of time actually fishing. If you "take turns", then you got 1 guy fishing at a time, with everyone else standing around watching. That's fun, for a little while, but gets old pretty quick. If you go with the leapfrog method, then more people means the "jumps" are bigger, you end up spending more time walking than fishing. You also cover water too fast and usually run out of good water quickly.

For an event like this, 4 per stream is probably about max. So pick a place where you can send many groups to many different streams.
