RRT,

it is my understanding that the Juniata hasnt fished as good as it used to for over a decade.I am not saying that the fishing is bad,but my understanding is that it had dropped from its former glory for smallmouth.I know a few guys that used to drive out there alot to fish the Juniata an had relayed that it was not the fishery it had been.I also know that theres alot of things that have to have a say before the water would get changed.

I do know that when you have a tailwater an the releases are too cold you lose some hatches,then again you get certain hatches that just welll kick butt as well.

I really like fishing the Pohopoco, but the average fish unless yer targeting the tube isnt anything to write home about.It does have nice hatches though an the water is always cold all summer above that dam in perryville.that impoundment doesnt help the temps for water leaving it as much as if there was no impoundment IMHO.

YMMV.
