I took the temperature of Maine's Androscoggin River at Leeds a few days ago (just a brief stop, no fishing). 78-79 degrees. The fishing has supposedly been excellent there.

I was fishing nearby lakes- the water there was a little cooler, 74-77 degrees. Got fish nearly every outing, most of them on top. Did most of my fishing from 1 hour before sunset to dark-thirty, and predawn to 7am (before 6am was best.) Just casting off the bank, over rocky drop-offs. I liked using a big Shenk's Sculpin fished dry the most, but everything I put on got action. Biggest hassle was the little sunnies pecking at my flies. I can't help thinking that they tip off the bass that the lure is a fake.
