

Subject: : Fly Fishing Events and Meet-ups

Topic: : Pocono Newbie Jam - Fall Edition

Re: Pocono Newbie Jam - Fall Edition

Author: : PoconoPaul

Date: : 2012/8/9 23:32:35

URL:

I have a couple of brookie streams in mind and these are a bit up north too so it's possible we might be thinking the same streams.

Meantime I think we should definitely play it by ear with brookie streams depending on how the weather is over the course of the next few months.

Right now most streams are running low and with the heat it's probably not advisable to fish for brookies. Of course in saying this it's only August 9th right now and much can change in the next 2 months - so let's hope for a good bit of rain in September and hopefully cooler temps over the duration.

Depending on the above we can alternately fish the Pohopoco which has ample room and space to spread out, offering fingerling bred rainbows and wild browns, or some other streams in the general vicinity (short drives) from where we are going to meet.

In any case if we can't fit brookies in we always have next year to think about as discussed in the other thread that Swat started.

By the way, does someone want to volunteer to post the list of whose coming? And what they might be bringing (for lunch)?